

Station 20 – Emperor Street

1806, in the so-called French time, the building of the Emperor Street was started as a broad deployment street, which routes from Metz to Mainz, the “Route Impériale”, at the command of emperor Napoleon .

The street was 10 meters wide, whereof just 6 meters were fixed with stones. At the retreat of the defeated army of Napoleon, the Emperor Street had been damaged very hard.

At the time then, the street routed ahead of the city and that’s why today it is still called Emperor Street.

Today, the Emperor Street is a lively and feisty thoroughfare and commercial road with multiple shopping opportunities and capable service companies.
